Excerpt: .we would go through the whole of them next morning. And then having discoursed on various matters, our conversation, imperceptibly to myself--with such exquisite delicacy was the subject introduced by her--wandered into solemn subjects. Shall I tell you what she said I My memory carries every word of it. I can open the book of my life, and betwixt the pages find the pressed flowers of that dear girl s thoughts and teaching, and the perfume of those flowers is still so fresh, that never can they want life and colour and beauty whilst their sweet smell clings to them. But shall I tell you what she said? No; her words were not intended for the rude light of this printed page. She spoke of God, and from behind the sable curtains that lay upon the face of my mind her angel voice evoked...
