Not illustrated. 1835 Excerpt: .is, interrupted Lady Kilmany, a very unpleasant business, every way unpleasant! and should it go against him, poor young man, I really don t know what is to become of him. We must hope the best, however. Yet, where he is to find proofs at this distant period, I cannot imagine! I should fear it must be impossible. Were it only property that was attacked, that would be bad enough; but really, this is too bad! Oh, what can you mean, mamma! exclaimed Mary, with an energy which startled her mother: for Lady Kilmany s prolonged reply had run out into a sort of soliloquy, during which she seemed to have lost sight of the agonies of sus- pense she was causing her daughter to suffer. I shall explain it all to you, my dear, when we have a little more leisure. Indeed it cannot be a secret from any one; for all the transactions will of course appear, from time to time, in the papers. Do just say what it is all about, mammal said Mary, entreatingly, and deriving courage to ask the question, from the excess of her undefined fears. About, my dear?----oh, it is about villany and falsehood. I am quite convinced myself: but of what use is that?--my conviction won t save the poor young man from disgrace and ruin! For the misery of it is, that there will be no getting at the proofs in his favour---at least, so I fear!...
